Bush vs. Dukakis

By ANANDASHANKAR MAZUMDAR

Associate Writer*

The National Student Campaign for Voter Registration has compiled a list of general national issues along with the publically declared positions of Vice-President Bush and Governor Dukakis.

The positions were further explained by members of the WSU Political Science department.

The candidates take seemingly opposite positions on defense policy. Bush supports many more weapons systems than Dukakis, such as the Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI), the B-1 bomber, and the MX missile. Bush feels that the continuation of these programs and all other weapons programs are necessary for the United States to retain a good bargaining position in negotiations with the Soviet Union.

Dukakis believes that the U.S. should make a more fiscally responsible commitment to defense. He does support weapons programs such as the B-2 "Stealth" bomber and modernizations of conventional systems. The Democratic candidate supports the idea that American allies in Europe and Asia should begin to take more economic responsibility for their defense.

In other matters of foreign affairs, the candidates differ mainly in their attitudes towards South Africa and Nicaragua. Both are taking their traditional party positions in these cases: Dukakis wants the United States to put more pressure on the racist South African government to affect the abandonment of the apartheid system; Bush believes that high pressure would be ineffective against the present regime and that the government of South Africa should be allowed to work its own problems out.

The Republican ticket continues to support the Reagan policy on Central America. Bush believes that the Sandanista government in Managua is a Marxist puppet and should be continually opposed by the anti-government, pro-U.S. Contras, while Dukakis believes that the Contras are a corrupt remnant of the autocratic Somoza regime, who have neither the ability nor the popular support of the Nicaraguan people to be successful in ousting Daniel Ortega-Saavedra's government.

Dukakis supports a mutual moratorium on nuclear weapons testing by the U.S. and the U.S.S.R., while Bush does not.

Bush supports the sanctioning of chemical weapons while the Democratic candidate opposes any production of chemical weapons.

DEFENSE & FOREIGN POLICY

	DUKAKIS	BUSH
Ending nuclear weapons testing	YES	NO
Increased funding for the Strategic Defense Initiative (Star Wars)	NO	YES
MX Missile	NO	YES
Production of chemical weapons	NO	YES
Tougher economic sanctions against South Africa	YES	NO
Military aid to the Nicaraguan contras	NO	YES

THE ENVIRONMENT

	DUKAKIS	BUSH
Acid Rain	Reduce annual sulfur dioxide emissions by 12 million tons.	Reduce annual sulfur dioxide emissions by millions of tons.
Clean Water	Ban ocean dumping by 1991; supported renewal of the Clean Water Act.	Ban ocean dumping by 1991; supported Reagan veto of the Clean Water Act.
New Nuclear Reactors	No, until new safety measures are devised.	Yes, with high safety standards.
Offshore Oil Drilling	No, except where environmental quality will not be compromised.	Yes, except in sensitive areas.

Regarding the economy, Bush promises that income taxes will not be increased under any circumstance, while Dukakis would only raise them if all other attempts to reduce the national debt are unsuccessful. The candidates differ on raising the minimum wage to $4.55 an hour. Dukakis supports the raise; Bush opposes it.

On the environment, Bush has been part of an administration with a dismal, if not nonexistent, environmental record, but he promises to change the program. Dukakis has been accused of environmental irresponsibility in his administration of the Boston Harbor, but he claims that it was the Reagan administration that blocked his efforts to clean it up.

THE ECONOMY

	DUKAKIS	BUSH
Deficit Reduction Plan (first priority)	Improve tax enforcement.	Flexible freeze on spending.
Increased income taxes	LAST RESORT	NO
Minimum wage increased to $4.55/hr.	YES	NO

CIVIL RIGHTS

	DUKAKIS	BUSH
Equal Rights Amendment	YES	NO
Constitutional amendment to prohibit abortion	NO	YES
Universal Voter Registration Act	YES	NO POSITION

THE FAMILY

	DUKAKIS	BUSH
Child Care	Federal assistance and standards.	Tax credit for working parents.
Parental Leave	Guaranteed.	Up to employer.
Increased federal student loans	YES	YES
Guaranteed basic health insurance	YES	NO

Both candidates intend to reduce sulfur dioxide emissions by "millions"—Dukakis by 12 million; Bush by an unspecified number. Both candidates would ban ocean dumping by New Jersey and New York municipalities by 1991, although Bush fought against

George Bush's history to create a better future for us all

Building Your Future:
by Vice President George Bush.

I worked hard in college, because good grades didn't come easy to me. When I graduated, I considered my options. The law was one, public service another. With friends and family in the East, everyone thought I'd settle there. But Barbara and I wanted to get out on our own. We needed to be challenged to find not only our real selves, but our best selves. During the war, I'd been stationed in Corpus Christi, and a friend told me, "The oil fields of Texas—that's the place for ambitious young people these days."

So we packed everything we had into a little red Studebaker, and we drove to Texas. I started a business named Zapata Petroleum, and before long, we were providing not only a paycheck but hope for the future for several hundred people. That's what a dream is all about. Having an idea, and the freedom to pursue it. And I realized then what I realize now: That a job is more than something you do everyday, more than just a paycheck. A job is what you do with life, and the future you build for yourself and your family.

Your college years are the years in which you build a foundation for your future. Your college education is one of the first steps to making a mark for yourself in this world. That's why I support college savings bonds, so that paying for college isn't the impossible dream. I also support continued funding for grants for low-income students and work-study programs.

For most students, your biggest concern is getting a job after graduation. Well, more Americans are at work now than ever before. Nearly 18 million new jobs have been created under the Reagan-Bush Administration; interest rates have been cut in half; unemployment is at an historic low. These are good jobs at good wages. A job is what you're working so hard for now, and those long hours of study will pay off. That's because the economic expansion created by the Reagan-Bush Administration means that there will be a job for everyone who wants one. But only if they have the training and education to move into the increasingly high-tech marketplace of the future. A college education is the foundation you need for this.

People say that students today don't care about anything but themselves. And while I'm high on each of you finding the right job, there are other things I know that are important to you. Helping the homeless, the inner city youths, those caught up in drugs, the illiterate. As I've said before, I want a kinder, gentler nation. And I'm depending on the young people of today to help me lead this country into the future—one with a cleaner, safer environment, better schools, and opportunity for those not given it now.

Here's your chance to prove the cynics wrong, to prove that there's more to life than looking out for Number One. The time is ripe for a new idealism in this country—and it is your generation that can lead it. I proposed recently a program called YES, for Youth Engaged Service to America. Think about what you can do. Consider a contribution you can make over the long term. Reading for a blind person. Visiting a lonely senior citizen. Rebuilding a city, restoring a park. As Thomas said, "goodness is the investment that never fails." It's time for a new idealism in this country. It's time to elect a president who will build a better America, a president who can build our future.

I am that man.

Positions

the renewal of the Clean Water Act in the Senate in support of President Reagan's policies.

Dukakis would build no new nuclear reactors until "new safety measures are developed"; Bush would build them with "high safety standards." Bush would allow offshore oil drilling in all but "sensitive areas"; Dukakis would ban drilling "except where environmental quality will not be compromised."

The Universal Voter Registration Act is supported by Dukakis while Bush takes no position on the subject.

Bush takes the traditional conservative stance of opposing an Equal Rights Amendment to guarantee legal equality for women, while Dukakis supports the adoption of such an amendment.

The candidates also differ on the subject of abortion. Dukakis dislikes abortion but believes that the final decision should fall to the woman; Bush supports the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to ban abortion in all but the most extreme circumstances.

In order to meet the problems of child care, Bush would grant tax credits to working parents, while Dukakis would guarantee "federal assistance and standards" for child care. A Dukakis administration would also guarantee leave for parents without risk of losing their jobs; Bush would leave it up to the employer. Bush and Dukakis would both increase federal loan students.

Dukakis supports guaranteed basic health insurance for everyone; Bush opposes guaranteed basic health insurance by the government.

Hobson's accomplishments praised

To The Editor:

Writing this letter is not an easy task, since it can only contain a limited number of words. They just are not adequate to cover 10th District Senator Dave Hobson's many achievements, accomplishments, recognitions, awards for "Best" and "Outstanding" senator during his six years of serving in the Ohio Senate.

He has worked feverishly to minister to the needs of all Ohioans and what is best for our state.

I compare the recent ordeal of the three grey whales trapped in the ice and their fight to stay alive while volunteers also fought for their survival, to the Home State depositors' dilemma.

Though many supported our cause, it was Dave Hobson who determined, that through no fault of our own, we had been deceived, and so took up the fight for full recovery of our funds. The Home State fiasco resounded around the world and the banking industry was imperiled. Incidentally, the state of Ohio will have recovered the so-called "Bail-Out" of Home State when restitution of $22,000,000 has been paid by convicted Marvin Warner as ordered by the court.

Like the smallest and youngest of the whales having lost its life, Home State depositors lost much as they struggled with health, rent and mortgage payments, utility bills, food, etc. problems. After three agonizing months, we survived. Who saved our money? Dave Hobson!

I have made this comparison of "Home State depositors" and the three whales . . . lest we forget!

Dave's leadership is not only needed, but is essential in the Ohio Senate.

Give one of our finest senators your support on November 8th. Vote for Dave Hobson.

Reader encourages everyone to vote

To The Editor:

In a departure from my usual conservative Republican views expressed in previous Letters to the Editor of The Daily Guardian, I'd like to write on an issue which concerns everyone, whether we profess to be conservative, liberal, Republican, Democrat, Independent, Libertarian, or some combination of these political beliefs. This is the issue of voter participation, and in my opinion not enough Americans take the opportunity to go to the polls to exercise our privilege to vote. As Americans, we have the right to choose our elected officials and I cannot understand why some people do not participate in the electoral process.

During this election year, I've talked to many people with varying political beliefs and I've often carried on very spirited debates with people who support a candidate who takes an opposing stand on an issue I believe in. This debating among voters is as important as the debating among candidates. As Americans, we have the rare privilege to publicly support or disagree with government policy and as private citizens our active role in policy-making is carried even further by our right to vote. Those who do not care enough to vote forfeit their right to make policy.

As a conservative Republican, I would much rather debate the most liberal Democrat in the entire nation than try to make points with an apathetic non-voter. As least the Democrat has a set of beliefs and I know where he or she stands on the issues. We then can discuss our differences from a common frame of references which are issues themselves. For the non-voter there are no issues, only excuses.

Participation in elections is our privilege. We are a nation where our government may only act by the consent of the governed. As John Quincy Adams once said, "Posterity—you will never know how much it has cost my generation to preserve your freedom. I hope you will make good use of it." Let's all take former President Adams' advice and have a record turnout at the polls on November 8.

Reader questions Nutter Center

To The Editor:

I am a freshman here at Wright University and often have many questions about Wright State and many features it offers me.

One thing I would like to know is, what is the Nutter

Center? Is it going to be just a basketball arena or is there going to be more than just a basketball court with a whole lot of seats put around it? If there is more I was wondering if you could do a story of what the Nutter Center has. I am not the only person at Wright State who does not know what the Nutter Center is. Matter of fact, the freshman class probably does not know what the whole Nutter Center can do.

I read an article in the Dayton Daily News, which only talked about the financial problems of the Nutter Center. I hope this does not stop Wright State from getting the Nutter Center, but all I want to know is what is the Nutter Center?

If you can do an article on the Nutter Center, I, and I am sure the rest of the freshmen class, would greatly appreciate it.

Republicans using "disinformation campaign"

To the Editor:

I'm glad that the Ohio Jobs and Peace Campaign caught the attention of Kyle Little (Ed-Op p., Oct 25), and others at WSU. It is remarkable that all 10 Republican congressmen from Ohio supported Reagan's illegal contra war, and all Democratic congresspersons opposed contra aid.

This "presidential proxy war" has been declared illegal by the International Court of Justice; it violates the UN Charter, the O.A.S. Charter, our own Neutrality Act, and the US Constitution, which provides that only Congress can declare war. Doubtless many at WSU saw the excellent PBS-TV program, "The Secret Government; The Constitution in Crisis," by Bill Moyers, now available in book form, Forward by Henry Steele Commager (Christic Institute, published $9.95, 144 pp.).

The contra war has been opposed by nearly all the governments and peoples of Central and South America, plus Canada, Mexico, Western Europe, and nearly all of our democratic allies, as well as by 60-70% of the American people in polls for the past several years. The Contras are not "freedom fighters," as Reagan's "disinformation campaign" has claimed. The leaders were ex-Samocistas, recruited by the CIA, who have killed and terrorized primarily civilians, destroyed social and economic enterprises, such as health clinics in the villages, tortured and killed some 25,000 people, many of them defenseless women and children—not Communists, but mostly devout Catholics.

In this fight against the largest military power on earth, the Sandinistas have temporarily curtailed some liberties, but unfortunately occurs in any country fighting for its survival. Amnesty International, Americas' Watch, the National Lawyers' Guild, and other neutral observers have documented that the gravest human rights abuses have been perpetrated by Reagan's mercenaries, the contras in Nicaragua, and the army and death squads in El Salvador, who have been bombing and strafing villages in that overcrowded country for several years. Congressman Hall and others called for an investigation of the recently expanded death squad activity in El Salvador. Duarte's government gets about $1.5 million a day from the US taxpayers, and with his illness, the right-wing Arena party is now stepping up its terrorism against the peasants.

Vice President Bush has been deeply involved not only in the Iran-Contra and Noriega scandals. Reportedly, he approved having US planes delivering arms to the contras returning from Honduras with cocaine and other drugs for the US. So now, the US with 5% of the world's population reportedly consumes 50% of the world's cocaine (CBS News). And this with the alleged support of the man who was put in charge of the war on drugs! That alone is sufficient reason to vote for Dukakis, during whose term as governor, drug use dropped by 4/5 in Massachusetts schools, and crime dropped 13% (Dayton Daily News, Op-Ed, Oct. 25).

Accurate information on Central America and these related scandals can be obtained from reputable Latin American scholars at WSU, UD, Miami U., OSU, the Latin American Studies Association, Christian Science Monitor, the National League of Women Voters, and many other reputable sources.

All heavy metal is not Satanism

To The Editor:

There seems to be a malignant growth on our society — no, it's not the over-abundance of Elvis impersonators — Satanism. While all of us can agree that this form of "religious" practice is unethical and immoral, we do not know what encourages it.

While I was watching the Geraldo Rivera show that aired Tuesday night, I noticed that there was an underlying theme to the show. That theme was that Heavy Metal music was the root of this evil. I, being a person who has been a fan of this music for the last seven or eight years, I was appalled at this accusation.

I am not, however, naive enough to assume that none of heavy metal is involved with Satanism. Being an "expert" on heavy metal (at least as close to an expert as we have here at Wright State) I can safely say that there are no more than two heavy metal groups that promote Satanism (these two being King Diamond and Venom). But I can also safely say that more than 500,000 people, waiting with baited breath, to see the demise of the whole musical form. Let's not condemn the whole Aryan race for the actions of Adolf Hitler, so to speak.

Take for example Colonel Aquino, a guest on the Geraldo show. Aquino was a colonel in the United States army for 20 years, while he headed a Satanic cult. As an aside, the government was totally aware of his "religious" affiliation. Should we, therefore, say that the army and the government are responsible for Satanism? — I think not.

The thing that most of these morality-dealing groups (such as the Parents Music Resource Center) fail to recognize is that most of these bands are not promoting Satan, but pointing out the absurdities of the Hitlers, Mussolinis and Mengelas. There is a pronounced difference between singing about something and promoting it.

I know what you're thinking: "But Jon, why is it that most of the heinous crimes connected with Satanism are done by people who listen to heavy metal?" Well, my pretties, I also have a view on that. It seems that the cryptic violence and lechery exercises in the name of Satanism can be attributed to the young, underprivileged, suppressed lower and lower-middle classes (from which was reared). More often than not, heavy metal is the music of choice for these kids — for all of them, not just the select savages who choose to partake in Satanism. Again, let's not condemn everyone for the actions of a select few.

In a country where we all pride ourselves on freedom of expression and the basic human right to do so, I find it repulsive that some are still trying to censor forms of expression that they deem offensive. If the United States government recognizes Satanism as a valid religion — rightly or wrongly — it must not be a baseless religion. Maybe even Satan-promoting bands have a right to do so — whether we like it or not. But let us not forget this old adage: "I may not agree with everything you say, but I'll defend to the death your right to say it."

In summation, I would like to express my total and complete repulsion with the accusation that all heavy metal embraces Satanism. While it may not be a baseless accusation to say some — better yet, a very few — sing about Satanism, I can honestly say that I have never seen any form of Satan worship of any kind, as long as I have been listening to heavy metal.

Reader searches for enlightenment

To The Editor:

Last Friday's Guardian carried an editorial by a Mr. Edgar J. Lawrence entitled "'True Morality' exists not only in Conservatism." In response to Mr. Lawrence I would just like to say, "I don't get it!" What is your position, and what exactly (or even vaguely) is your point?

Noting some trite allusion to Jonathan Swift's Modest Proposal, I originally assumed you would follow in the spirit of satire, in which case your goal would be to show that "True Morality" is indeed in the hands of conservatives. But if your position is meant to be a conservative one, I must say your choice of "notable" conservatives is a little weak (no offense to messrs. Buchanan, Wild, or Crabtree). In addition to the lack of felicitous representatives, your suggestions for certain social ameliorations are both idiotic and in poor taste.

If your position is a liberal one (and for the sake of conservatives, I hope it is), then I must assume your title was sincere. Though it is totally out of tone with the body of your article (assuming the tone to be satirical), I can accept that blunder. But here again what could possibly be your point? Not many intelligent, well-informed liberals would suggest that conservatives find criminals and homosexuals to be "unacceptable elements" in society. And even if there were a few such liberals lurking around, not even they would be so presumptuous to base such a pungent critique of conservatism on the supposed expressions of three arbitrarily chosen "representatives" none of which is even quoted in your article.

Conservatives may be crassly insulted, and liberals outright embarrassed, but other than these your article has no clear positions or desired effect.

So please brush up on your copy of Gulliver's Travels, and rinse your mind of leftist bunk with a couple National Reviews, and then tell us what you really think.

Reader compares sports and drugs

To the Editor:

The drugs that come into our country are killing and enslaving a staggeringly large number of Americans. The statistics are overwhelming and the crisis is, indeed, now recognized as our society's most critical dilemma. But along a more subtle line I notice another drug at work—a product of good ol' American patriotism and spirit. Its abusers are not physically dependent (usually), and their lives are not banished from the moral mainstream. In fact, familiarity with this drug is probably more socially valuable than any other (i.e. more socially convenient). The problem is that the over zealous concern toward the outcome and statistics of sporting events is virtually dominating the minds of an enormous number of our respected citizens and potential thinkers and activists. When noting the social interaction between these fanatics, we see how sports have, in fact, replaced religion for the role of "Opiate of the Masses." We see young and old turn to the nightly news only in time to catch another fix. Newspapers are faithfully purchased solely for the sports section (never mind new legislation, presidential campaigns, or social uprisings in Europe). Records and stats engross all thoughts while last night's game soon becomes the focus of a long and fervent debate. The sad part is, as with all losses of human quality, that these abusers are generally quite intelligent, and all have the potential to develop an active, rational concern for the future of our society.

Sports and following sporting events are not bad in and of themselves. But as with other drugs, I see their ardent fever hindering (if not cauterizing) the higher quality thoughts of our students and other respected citizens. Let us each as individuals face boldly our illness lest it consumes us, and all we leave in the memories of our posterity is the epitaph, "Yeah, but Gramps never missed a Reds game." In the meantime save the sports section for the household pet and let the din of pertinent discussion fill our living rooms, autos and even (God help us) our local taverns.

Lady Raiders "Hyde" at Miami but defeat Morehead

By TODD BUNNELL

Sports Editor

Linda Schoenstedt, Wright State's head volleyball coach, must be staying up late and watching too many old movies. The last few nights, Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde has been playing over and over. Mr. Hyde—the monster—was the star in the first part which occurred in Oxford, Tuesday. WSU lost to Miami in three games. Wednesday night, Dr. Jekyll made his calm and analytical appearance as WSU downed Morehead State 15-12, 15-8 and 15-12.

Morehead State, now 26-7, was ranked 10th in the south region coming into the match. "When we're Jekyll, we can play with anybody," Schoenstedt said. "We're Hyde because we're young."

The Lady Raiders fell to a 3-0 deficit early in the opening game but remained collected. Traci McCoy had a cross-court kill to knot the score at 4-4 and WSU didn't look back from then on.

"It was extremely important for us to win the first game—especially because of last night," Schoenstedt said. "When they jumped out to a 3-0 lead I said, 'Oh, no!' but I was impressed with how they came back. It made me feel good about the team."

The second game went even smoother because Wright State was forcing the Lady Eagles to hit outside and make bad passes. The turning point of the game came when the score was tied at 8-8 with Whitney serving. The freshman is second on the team in service aces and didn't disappoint the tropical clad crowd of 250. The game ended on a Micki Harris block.

The third game started out slow for the Lady Raiders as the Lady Eagles surmounted a 7 to 3 lead.

Schoenstedt said, "Morehead came out in the third game and served us short and we sat back a little bit."

However, when Harris came up with an ace of her own, the scoreboard read 7-7.

"They turned it on and off when they had to," Schoenstedt added.

The final game ended when Eileen Hughes and Harris combined for a block. McCoy led in kills with 11 while Harris added eight. Hughes led in digs with 14 while McCoy and Kara Benningfield had eight each. At the net, Harris dominated with three block solos and two block assists.

Up next for the 23-12 Lady Raiders will be the Northern Kentucky Lady Norse, November 7, at Highland Heights, Kentucky. NKU won last year's shoot-out in five games. "They're always a disciplined team on the floor. They're very highly respected, but this is a match I think we should win."

Seniors play last soccer game on Sunday afternoon

By EAMON COSTELLO

Michael McDonald, John Gibbs, Jim Kinderdine, Jeff Popp and Eric Delp. Take a good look at these names. Each has something in common with the others. These are the seniors on the Wright State men's soccer team.

On Sunday at 1 pm, they will play their final game for WSU but each has an opportunity to make sure that their names will not be soon forgotten. When Wright State meets Miami, the Raiders will be gunning for their 16th victory of the season—the most ever in Wright State's history.

The Raiders tied the Record of the 1984 squad by gaining their 15th victory on Wednesday against Ohio State. The match was a defensive struggle throughout with both teams battling to control the midfield. As the first half came to a close, with neither team on the scoreboard, it became increasingly apparent that the first team to score would be the victor. With 7:43 remaining, Jim Ulrich picked up an assist when he juggled the ball over the charging Ohio State goalkeeper and a streaking John Gibbs made sure the ball found the net.

The one to nothing margin held up for a victory but not without its anxious moments. Ohio State mounted a late charge at the Raiders but Sherman Mink made some spectacular saves to preserve the win.

Raider coach Greg Andrus said, "The field was a little rough and we didn't play our best game of the year, but this was one of those matches where you throw out the records and we're happy to come away with the win."

Wright State outshot the Bucks 9-7.

The Miami match promises to be a good contest as the Redskins come into town riding a five-game win streak. As well as being the last contest of the year for WSU, Sunday's match is Fan Appreciation Day. A television and other prizes will be given away. So, come out to bid farewell to this year's seniors and root the Raiders to a route of the Redskins.

Basketball broadcast plans

Wright State University athletic director Mike Cusak has announced the broadcast plans for the 1988-89 basketball season. The Raiders will begin their second campaign at the Division I on Saturday, December 3 against Middle Tennessee State. Last year, Wright State finished 16-11.

After a 10-year hiatus, WONE-AM returns to carry all Wright State games, home and away. WONE was the official station of Raider basketball in the late 1970's.

Located at 980 on the dial, WONE is a 24-hour-a-day, 5,000-watt station with a country music format.

Broadcasting all 28 regular-season games on the radio will be the team of Greg Gahris and Tom Michaels. Gahris, a graduate of Miami (OH), will serve as play-by-play announcer and host the pre-game show with head coach Ralph Underhill. Michaels, an Ohio State grad, returns as color commentator and will again handle the post-game show with assistant coach Jim Brown. The veteran Dayton-area sportscasters begin their ninth year of broadcasting Raider basketball.

Seven Wright State games will be telecast on WRGT-TV 45, an independent, commercial station in Dayton. Long-time sportscaster Tom Hamlin will do the play-by-play, while former Raider stand-out Mark Vest will be the analyst. Hamlin's career spans 27 years and includes stints as play-by-play voice of Southeastern Conference football and basketball, Ohio State football and basketball, and two years with the Tampa Bay Buccaneers of the NFL. Vest completed his career in 1986 and stands second on the all-time scoring list with 1,559 points. He is currently employed by Arthur Andersen & Co.

"We are very excited about returning to WONE," Cusak said. "I think both parties are looking at the

Competition in America: It's whether you win or not

Thoughts and Musings by Philip
E. L. Greene

I have noticed a very disturbing trend. Not a new trend, by any means, but one which has had a definite effect upon the lives of the inhabitants of this society, and upon the conduct of those lives. And I see it getting worse. What has drawn my attention to this trend were two incidents which happened recently: one in a football game, the other in a television show about politics.

The first incident occurred in the game between the Cincinnati Bengals and the Cleveland Browns (Oct. 30). Wide receiver Chris Collinsworth went out for a deep pass and was closely covered by a Cleveland defender who, in actuality, was in better position to catch the pass than was Collinsworth. To prevent this ultimate disaster, Collinsworth gave the defender a shove to the head, unseen by the official. (This, for those of you who do not follow football, constitutes interference and carries one of the most costly penalties in the game, 15 yards marked off against the offending offensive team.) Seconds after the endless replays, a camera man caught a shot of Collinsworth on the sidelines while the commentators were still discussing the play. There he stood, completely unaffected by the fact that he had broken a rule. In fact, he seemed to be rather satisfied about it all.

The second occurrence took place in the miniseries Favorite Son which aired the same night. In it, an incumbent vice president who is running for president is discussing with his campaign manager one of his opponents. The opposing candidate, who also happens to be the hero of the tale, seems to be, as the manager puts it, "Mr. Clean." In other words, and it is stated in so many words, there is no dirt to dig up on him by way of his voting record or congressional performance. Therefore, the manager decides, and the VP finally accedes, they should delve deeply into the sexual life of the man.

What these episodes point out is the premise that it is better to win at all costs rather than to lose fairly. Americans have always been a competitive people, and have always taken competition, and the rewards of winning, seriously. But in earlier times, there was emphasis on winning fairly; using one's ability to gain the advantage and learning and improving from defeat. There was honor in losing if one but did the best he (or she) could and was simply outmatched. There was the realization that, no matter how good one might be at any given thing, someone, somewhere was always better on some given day.

America has become, I fear, obsessed with the act of winning. No longer does it matter "how you play the game," rather it is "whether you win or lose that counts." The theme nowadays is "get ahead," "never give a sucker an even break," and "it's only illegal if you get caught."

What is wrong with us? Why is it that we, Americans, America, cannot accept or admit that we can lose? What is the shame in not being the best on this day or that? Why do we have to "come out on top," regardless of how we do it, or whether it is fair or dirty?

I submit that anyone, even the lowest, most despicable, most untalented person can win at anything, so long as he or she can get away with cheating. It takes no special ability, no skill, no commitment to the ideals of the activity. All it takes is a willingness to put one's self above, or rather apart, from the rules, and to carry that willingness into action in such a way that one does not get caught. Only a Champion, on the other hand, can be victorious while playing by the rules.

Perhaps we are, as has been said, a nation of cowards. It certainly seems so at times. We are cowardly to accept the fact that we are not always the best at everything we do. We are cowardly to hold our heads high, even though someone else took home the trophy. We are cowardly when we say, "I did my best and it wasn't good enough . . . this time," and then go on to find out why and spend time working on it so that the next time, our best is enough. We want results today, NOW and if we have to cheat to get them . . . well, Machiavelli said it best: "The end justifies the means."

I'm glad I'm not a "Eighties" sort of guy," me, the Champion, the Champion, is he or she who puts something above winning; something like Honor or Truth, or just plain Fairness. To me, THAT is the American Way.
